W. S. M'NARY AS HE LOOKS TO-DAY

Snapshot of Whitney manager and former Congressman as he was on his way to appear before the Ballot Commission.

Mr. McNary is still the central figure in the inquiry to determine who was the Democratic nominee at Springfield.

M'NARY IN CLASH WITH MAYBERRY

Bartlett Counsel Opens Cross-Examination with Attempt to Show Regularity of State Convention Proceedings—Sharp Retort to Lawyer's Demand for Direct Answer to Questions.

Beginning the cross-examination of ex-Congressman William S. McNary before the Ballot Law Commission, which is to decide whether Bartlett or Whitney was nominated at Springfield, at the State House to-day, Attorney George L. Mayberry, counsel for the Bartlett forces, sought to show that the method of issuing the tickets and coupons to the convention and the issuance of the call was the same as observed when Mr. McNary was in control of the State Committee.

The Bartlett plan, as outlined in the opening of the cross-examination, is to show that the strictest regularity was observed in the convention preliminaries.

ENGAGE IN SHARP TIFFS.

By comparing other conventions, held when Mr. McNary was chairman of the Democratic State Committee, with that at Springfield, Mr. Mayberry endeavored to get the ex-Congressman and Whitney leader to admit that there was no difference.

When counsel sought to find out what had become of the old records of the State Committee, the witness said that he had heard they were boxed up and retained by Secretary Reuben Rush of Boston, who had been unable to collect money due him for services. Rush had taken the furniture also.

Several times Mr. Mayberry and the witness engaged in little tiffs. "Don't answer my question by asking another," said Mr. Mayberry sharply. To which Mr. McNary replied in the same tone: "Yes, I will." The Bartlett counsel made no comment.

The crowd at the hearing was not as large as that of Saturday.

FOUR POLICEMEN ON DUTY.

On one side of the table sat the Bartlett forces and on the other the Whitney clansmen were seated together. George Fred Williams, "Jerry" Watson and Penfield J. Kiley formed a little group of their own and followed the cross-examination of McNary closely.

Four police officers were on duty, two outside of the door and two others just back of the three members of the commission.

ASKS FOR PARTY RECORDS.

Mr. McNary was called to the stand by Mr. Parker and immediately turned over to Mr. Mayberry for cross-examination:

Q.—You have been in politics and identified with the Democratic party for a number of years, haven't you, Mr. McNary? A.—Yes.

Q.—How long have you been a member of the Democratic State Committee? A.—Since 1898.

Q.—Do you know anything about the present location of the old records of the committee? A.—I don't know. I understand they were taken by Mr. Rush. (Reuben Rush of Boston, formerly secretary of the Democratic State Committee.)

Q.—Mr. Rush is a friend of yours? A.—He has been at times. At other times he has been opposed to me.

Q.—It was through your influence that he was appointed—or let me ask first what was his position? A.—He was clerk in 1900.

Q.—It was through your influence he was appointed? A.—I was supplied on from Washington suggesting his name.

Q.—Did you ever serve you, chairman of the committee? A.—In 1901-2-3-4.

THINKS RUSH TOOK THEM.

Q.—You say Mr. Rush has the old records in his possession? A.—No, I did not say that. I said that I understand that he took them.

Q.—Can you give us his reason for doing so? A.—No; but I understand that he had a bill against the old committee so he took the records and furniture.

Q.—Are they still in his possession do you know? A.—I don't know. I heard some talk about his having boxed them up and sent them to Colonel Drinkwater of Braintree.

Q.—Who was chairman of the Democratic State Committee in 1905? A.—Mr. Flaherty, I think. (Judge Flaherty of Gloucester, deceased.)

Q.—In 1906? A.—I'm quite clear. I think Mr. Lyons.

Q.—Was Mr. Quincy? A.—I think he was either chairman of the State committee in administration, that all politicians shall feel content and be secure in the knowledge of fair play, and that if their own good conduct has won from the public some measure of credit for the land of the departure, he shall not be led by his own ambition, by persuasion or even by a possible need of his service in another place to abandon them, and the duties which he has taught them to regard as of the first importance to the community.

"A man who does the work of Police Commissioner with such an outlook gives to the public his full measure of service, which the public has the right to exact. If, therefore, he desires no other office and cannot be convinced after full discussion that it is his paramount duty to seek a position which he does not want, it is his right to go steadily on with the work for which he is already responsible.

Considered Matter Fully.

"From the beginning such has been my attitude respecting a nomination for Mayor, and I have refrained from any public declaration in order that the other side of the question might be considered with full care. That has been done, and yet, on my judgment and my conscience, I believe I am right.

"Therefore, it is that, though grateful for all that had been said to me and concerning me privately and publicly, I never-theless remain with the police.

O'MEARA REFUSES TO RUN FOR MAYOR

SAYS SENSE OF DUTY COMPELS HIM TO DECLINE NOMINATIONS.

Police Commissioner Stephen O'Meara today, in statements to the press and to Chairman Graves of the Republican City Committee, absolutely declines to be considered as the Republican nominee for Mayor.

He declares that he will not accept any nomination for Mayor.

Mr. O'Meara declares that he has considered the matter from all sides, and that his sense of duty to the city of Boston in continuing his work as police commissioner compels his refusal. Mr. O'Meara's statement to the press follows:

"I shall not leave the police department. If was for this work and none other that I returned home sixteen months ago. It is difficult and laborious beyond the knowledge of most men, but if I live I shall see it through.

"It is not the mere business of the department that impresses me, and not even the handling of a body of 1,400 picked men. It is the tremendous effect upon public morals and public order which may be governed by the Boston police force when guided by an increased efficiency and a growing comprehension of the true relations of the people to the law and to the police.

Duty to the Police.

"It is essential to such growth by the police force that there shall be compo-

MORAN ACCEPTS LEAGUE'S CALL IN LETTER TO VOTERS

District Attorney John B. Moran, nominated by the Independence League for re-election, has issued the following letter of acceptance:

"Dr. Reardon of Commonwealth avenue, one of the best known throat specialists in Boston, after a careful examination, advises me that any attempt by me to deliver a speech or to argue a case would result in permanent disability of my vocal cords.

"The possibility of conducting a speaking campaign no longer exists.

"Under this condition of affairs I deem it advisable and justifiable to recede from the position I publicly took a few weeks ago of not accepting the nomination of any political party.

"My name will appear on the ballot as 'Independence League' and 'Non-Partisan.'

"Inasmuch as I expect to receive the votes of Democrats, Republicans and Leaguers, and inasmuch as partisan speeches made in my behalf by speakers of these political parties would tend to alienate from me many members of the other parties who would be inclined to vote for me, it becomes necessary for me to request that all speakers friendly to me refrain from attacking my opponents.

"As the names of Guild, Hisgen, Bartlett and Whitney will all appear on the ballots, it is evident that intense political feeling will be aroused, and that wild, reckless and false charges and counter charges will be made by speakers in each party and faction.

"As I have no interest whatever in the State fight now waged and no interest whatever in the municipal fight soon to be begun, I desire to keep myself aloof from all factions.

"I will have nothing to do with them, and I cannot allow speakers on any platform to drag me into their squabbles.

"Any speaker may say complimentary words about the manner in which the affairs of my office have been conducted, but more than that I expressly forbid.

"What I may desire to say to the public will from time to time be published as occasion requires.

(Signed) JOHN B. MORAN."

FREES ACCUSED; RAPS OFFICER

Arrested on the charge of stealing a single piece of wood from the New Haven railroad tracks, after, he alleges, he was beaten unmercifully on the head by Special Officer Thompson, Patrick Kane was today discharged in the South Boston Court by Judge Fallon, who denounced the action of the policeman.

"I think you are the man who ought to be arrested," said the judge. "I discharge this prisoner."

Kane, who is only twenty-two years old and lives at No. 81 Bolton street, told the Court that he simply picked up one stick he found lying on the tracks.

DIED BY GAS DAY OF FIRST COMMUNION

LOWELL, Oct. 14.—With his hands folded across his breast as though he had expired while in prayer, Joseph Deslauriers, a sixteen-year-old Pelham, N. H., boy, who was to have received his first communion at St. Joseph's Church yesterday, was found dead in bed, gas flowing from an open jet, which the boy had extinguished by blowing. Ignorance of city customs is attributed the lad's death.

HAD NO FIREWORKS PERMIT; FINED $20

For storing fireworks without a permit in the barn of former Representative M. J. Collins, George Burzell of No. 93 Pearl street was today fined $20 by Judge Fallon in the South Boston court. He appealed and was held in $300 for the Superior Court. Collins was discharged.

AGED EMPEROR MAKES A BRAVE FIGHT FOR LIFE

Old Age Greatest Danger in Illness of Francis Joseph of Austria.

VIENNA, Austria, Oct. 14.—Emperor Francis Joseph's general condition to-day is reported to be somewhat improved. During the night the Emperor was restless and his cough was troublesome, but the fever has decreased. The greatest danger lies in his weakness due to old age. Heads are bowed in prayer for the recovery of the aged monarch. Never before, say those familiar with the country's history, has such profound love and respect been shown by the populace to a ruler of Austria.

The battle for life that the Emperor-

A vote for Hisgen and Brown is a vote to rebuke the Springfield rioters.

King is making amazes even the physicians. With temperature below normal and his weak old age and illness he demands that he be allowed to be in the open air.

"I have been in the open air all my life. I must be there now, otherwise how can I recover quickly?" asked the Emperor.

The Emperor has little appetite and has been able to partake of but small quantities of food. His physicians urge upon him the necessity of eating, and he has made the greatest efforts to swallow strengthening food.

He insists on continuing his duties, and when told that he must stop refused point blank to cease for a single instant. He ordered on receiving the foreign minister, Baron von Aehrenthal, as well as several other functionaries.

When told of the crowds that waited so eagerly outside for news from him his face wore a pleased smile, and he spoke of the satisfaction their interest gave him.

Dr. Kersl, the Emperor's private physician, is in constant consultation. They have refused to sign optimistic bulletins, which are issued by the official news agency.

McNary, on Rack, Questioned About Other Conventions

FORMER CONGRESSMAN CLASHES WITH LAWYER MAYBERRY WHEN UNDER CROSS-FIRE.

mittee or chairman of the executive committee.

Q—When was there a contest previous to the convention, to use your words, in 1902?

Q—What was the contest? A.—It was a fight between Mr. Gaston and Mr. Hamlin.

SPEAKS OF OLD CONTESTS.

Q—When else? A.—That was the only one, I think.

Q—Wasn't there a contest over some other unit here in 1904? A.—Yes, I think there was a contest over the election of delegates to the National convention.

Q—Any other contests or fights? A.—You mean for Governor?

Q—No, any fight at all. A.—Well, in 1895 there was contest for the election of delegates to the National Democratic convention.

Q—Then your statement under direct examination that the convention in 1902 at the time of the Gaston-Hamlin fight was the only one where the credentials were issued with a coupon attached is not so, A.—I did not say that.

Q—Was that the only contest where the credential was issued with a coupon. A.—No, it has been the custom since the Gaston-Hamlin convention in 1902 to issue credentials with a coupon attached.

Q—Are you sure about that? A.—That is my best recollection.

Q—Well, you might be mistaken? A.—Yes, but I don't think I am.

Q—Has it ever been the custom to issue admission tickets? A.—To what part of the hall?

CLASHES WITH MAYBERRY.

Here Mr. Mayberry said to the witness, "Don't answer my question by asking another one."

To which the former congressman replied, "Yes, I will."

Continuing, Mr. Mayberry asked:

Q—Has it always been the custom to frame the call for the Democratic convention as this one is (indicating the call for the Springfield convention)? A.—I am not sure.

Q—Was it in 1904 when you were chairman? A.—I am not sure. I have not refreshed my mind.

Q—You could identify such a call? A.—I presume so.

Q—Were tickets issued in 1904? A.—Tickets of what character?

Q—General admission tickets for spectators? A.—I presume so. Tickets were issued for the spectators in the gallery and the guests on the platform and on the members of the press.

Q—There were no admission tickets for the floor of the hall? A.—Very likely not.

MANY THINGS IN DOUBT.

Q—How were the credentials issued that year? A.—They were issued with a coupon and a seat number indicated on it, I think. Oh, there were two conventions that year (1904), one in the Spring and one in the Fall. Which one do you refer to?

Q—I am referring to the convention in the Fall, where Mr. Douglas was nominated for Governor. Were credentials issued with coupons? A.—I am not sure, clear, I think there was a coupon.

Q—Were the credentials taken up before the man went into the hall. A.—I'm not quite clear, I think not.

Q—Didn't the credentials taken up after the delegates were seated in the hall? A.—I don't know, they might have been. There was no control, at that time, at such convention.

Q—Then it was often the custom for delegates to retain his credentials? A.—No, I don't think so.

Q—Was any delegates were given a ticket with such a coupon? A.—Yes.

Q—In the old days weren't credentials sometimes taken up the night before? A.—Yes I think so.

USED TO HAVE DOOR CHECKS.

Q—Can you recall any such time? A.—No.

Q—When a coupon was issued to a delegate did that coupon allow him to go and come? A.—No, we used a door check.

Q—These door checks were printed and given out to everybody? A.—They were given to the doorkeeper at the different doors.

Q—Were they given out generally? A.—No.

Mr. McNary was then shown a copy of the call for the convention of 1904, also for 1902 and for 1903.

Q—Is that a copy? A.—It may be.

Q—Can you see any difference between them and the one for the Springfield convention? A.—I can't tell any difference, but I haven't the other before for comparison.

Q—Have you looked at these? A.—No, I haven't.

Q—Do you know who has done the printing of the convention calls? A.—A number of firms at different times.

Q—Do you know of any particular firm that has done the printing of these calls? A.—No, I can't remember any particular firm.

NEVER SAW RED TICKETS.

Q—You were secretary of the State Committee, I believe? A.—Yes, I was secretary in 1898, 1899 and 1900.

Mr. Mayberry then handed to Mr. McNary a red ticket, at the same time asking: "Do you recognize this ticket? Was that used at the convention in 1902?

Mr. McNary took the ticket, looked it over and replied:

"No, I never saw anything like it before."

The ticket was marked for identification. Handing the witness another paper, Mr. Mayberry asked:

"Do you identify this paper as the form of credential used when you were chairman in 1904? After examining this paper, Mr. McNary said: "Yes."

Taking back the paper Mr. Mayberry said:

"I read from the top: 'This credential admits to hall.' Certain coupon for seat in hall.'"

IDENTIFIES CREDENTIAL.

Then, turning to the witness again, he asked:

Q—Was the coupon to be retained for a seat in the hall? A.—Yes.

Handing Mr. McNary another paper, Mr. Mayberry asked:

Q—Do you identify this paper as the form of credential used in 1905? A.—I should say it was.

Taking the paper from the witness, Mr. Mayberry said:

"I read from the top of this paper: 'This credential admits to convention hall.' Turning to the witness again, he asked: 'And that was a separate ticket with a coupon attached to it, wasn't it? A.—Yes, sir, it seems so.

Taking still another paper from the table, and handing it to the witness, Mr. Mayberry said:

Q—Do you identify this as the form of credential used in 1906? A.—I think it very likely it was. But I was not a delegate to the convention. I went on a credential from Framingham, and I think a credential from Framingham is the form of credential used last year.

WAS UNIFORMED.

Mr. McNary was then asked to identify credentials used in 1896, and said that he could not of his own personal knowledge.

At this point, Mr. Parker, attorney for the Whitney forces, arose and said:

"Mr. Chairman, in order to facilitate matters I want to allow all these tickets and credentials of my brother and I will not be exhibited as a matter of stumbling along identifying them this way."

"Very well," Mr. McNary replied. "But you were at the convention last year weren't you?"

BAR MAYBERRY QUESTION.

Q.—Did you have to go out of the hall at all. A.—No, I did not.

Q.—By what authority to put the words 'this credential admits to convention hall' at the top of the credentials, wasn't it? A.—

This question was excluded, on objection.

Mr. McNary then explained that in issuing credentials to delegates to the convention, the credentials admitted to the convention hall, the ways in which they obtained and admitting only to a seat.

Q.—Do you recall any time when a coupon admitted to the hall? A.—No, my recollection is that any one in a seat was admitted to the convention hall. But in some instances a man moved in and started to come out again, he was given a check at the door, which would readmit him to the hall.

ADMITS FRAUD POSSIBLE.

Q.—Was it not possible for a man to buy a coupon inside the hall and go outside and give them to others? A.—I think it might be.

Q.—Do you know of it ever having been done? A.—No, sir.

Q.—If the coupon itself had been used to admit to the floor, outsiders might be issued an questions and take part in the voting, might they not? A.—Yes, sir.

HOLD HARVARD MAN IN $2,000 FOR ASSAULT

Boy Victim, Felled with Brick, in Serious Condition at Hospital.

Adolph J. Post, Harvard sophomore and son of a prominent Boston musician, charged with throwing a brick and seriously injuring little Joseph Hurley, was held in $2,000 bail by Judge Williams in the Roxbury District Court to-day. Post was accompanied in court by his father, Professor Louis F. Post, of the Boylston street station, for the prosecution, asked that the case be continued to await the outcome of the boy's injuries.

At the Children's Hospital on Hunting ton avenue, the following bulletin is given out:

"Joseph Hurley is lying in a semi-conscious state, the result of a fractured skull, when spoken to. His condition is serious, but the doctors will not venture to make any prognosis for twenty-four or forty-eight hours."

The alleged assault took place Saturday afternoon on a vacant lot opposite the Children's Hospital.

"We were kicking and passing a football," says Post, "myself and another student, when suddenly I saw a small boy, a pushcart vender on Huntington avenue, I think, was the name, run after and chase the children with a stick. They ran into the lot where we were playing and escaped the man."

Then, according to Post's story, the boy began to bother them, throwing pebbles and kicking the ball. He says he warned them to stop, and finally, more to frighten them than anything else, he picked up a brick and threw it into the crowd.

The brick struck the boy on the back of the head and he fell unconscious.

His companions carried him across the street to the Children's Hospital, where he was found to be suffering from a serious fracture at the base of the skull. His parents, who live at No. 587 Shawmut avenue, were notified and all possible was done to relieve the little sufferer.

Young Hurley before he left the scene, handed the card, bearing his name and address, to one of young Hurley's companions, saying that if the lad's injury proved serious he could be found ready to answer for it.

Mrs. John Hurley, the mother of the injured boy, said:

"I don't want to see the young man now away for this because I do not think he intended any harm. The little fellow has always been quiet and well behaved and I do not believe he is to blame any of the stone throwing or tormenting. It will not help my boy any if I am quicker by having the young man sent to prison, but he ought to have been more careful."

MAY BARE MYSTERY OF WILSON'S GRIP ON MOEN

HALF MILLION FUND LEFT BY THE WIRE KING NOW GOES TO HOSTLER.

The mystery of the hold which "Doc" Wilson, coachman and hostler, had on the late Philip L. Moen of Worcester, cloud man and barbed wire king, which made it possible for him to secure more than half a million dollars from the man, may not be solved, according to dispatches from New York. Within a few days there will be paid over to Wilson, who has taken up residence at Long Branch, the sum of $400,000 left from the fund of $750,000 created by the will of Moen, who died in 1901. It was specified in the will that if, after twenty years from 1887, when Wilson first gave evidence of his hold on Moen, no criminal charge had been preferred against the former hostler, what was left of the fund should be paid over to him.

Wilson, who was supposed to have died in Arizona, has been discovered living in an apartment house on West One Hundred and Seventh street, New York. He claims the name of Moen by right of birth. It is confidently expected that with the payment of this fund to Wilson that the story of why the wire king submitted so long to the hostler's demands for money will be made known, although it has been a mystery for twenty years.

Long-Guarded Secret.

A short time before his death, Moen testified in court that he had given Wilson, an ignorant hostler and coachman, more than half a million dollars in sums ranging as high as $20,000. In the course of a suit brought by Wilson to get more money, Moen made some very unusual monetary statements concerning him, but when pressed on the witness stand during cross-examination to explain, he declined to reveal his secret, and emphatically declared that he had been blackmailed.

Recent developments only add to the mystery. It is known that Wilson has invested a large deal of the fund in Newark, where he formerly resided. He has recently paid up a mortgage of $50,000 on a few days ago borrowed $11 to help him get back to Long Branch. He is also in borrowing many large sums from prominent business men in Newark on the strength of his prospects.

Mystery May Be Cleared.

"It is not unlikely," said Lawyer Frank M. Mechenor, of New York, "that this mystery will be cleared up after all. For the present, however, I am forced by the strictest relations which I have with the parties interested to speak more or less in riddles. I will say that the interests of the surviving members of the Moen family are at present represented by one of the most prominent law firms in New York. When old Philip Moen died in 1901, leaving a fortune of $38,000,000, he set apart a fund of $750,000, with the understanding that it was to be used to protect his family from any further demands which might be made by Doc Wilson, and to prosecute him, if opportunity offered, for the criminal law. It was further provided that if, at the end of twenty years from 1887, when his relations with Wilson began, no criminal charge had been established against Wilson, whatever was left of the fund should revert to him.

"Some time prior to his death Wilson C. Whitney represented the Moen interests. I now represent, in turn, the personal request of Mr. Whitney, who has been himself and who will soon be at the Metropolitan Club in New York. Mr. Whitney has a room on the third floor. I was present in his room when he gave Wilson $10,000 in cash. Wilson or Mr. Whitney at that time refused to compel Wilson to make certain admissions in writing and though he refused the money was given him nevertheless."

Cashed $3,000 Check.

Philip Moen was president of the Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company at Worcester, which controlled the valuable wire patents and was the biggest wire making establishment in this country. He was deacon in a Congregational church in Worcester. He was prominent in politics. His private life was apparently blameless. He was a polished gentleman, addicted to his diaries and courtly in his manners. They have been kept in a safe deposit vault. His father was a coachman. One day he presented two drafts for $1,000 each at the National Bank at Lafayette, Mass., by messenger. The drafts were signed by Philip Moen. The bank officers wired Moen to see if it was all right and received the reply:

"Cash any check in my name presented by Levi Wilson."

WORLD MODEL DOLL'S HOUSE AT FOOD FAIR

Little Mansion Fitted With All the Up-to-date Conveniences and Appliances.

Little children, if you still like dolls and doll houses in spite of the Teddy Bear, go to the Food Exposition in Mechanic's Building and see the most perfect doll's house in the world. It's there.

It is a two and a half story house with an attic and a cellar. But more wonderful than anything else are the electric lights in every room.

There are eight rooms in the house, front and back parlor, kitchen, bath room and four bedrooms, all furnished with the most delicate little beds, chairs and divans. The bath room is one of the most marvelous things about the entire house, having a porcelain tub and open plumbing. Water can be run through the pipes and this can then be turned into the tub.

Two Years in Building.

There are electric door bells, a front porch, and a large veranda on the back where a revolving clothes horse is placed upon which the little mother who is fortunate enough to have this house bought for, her can hang her dollies' clothes.

Dainty lace curtains are hung at all the windows, and from the lower and upper balconies are hung American flags of silk.

Andrew P. Delia, who is in mason by trade, was two years building the house, which was made by hand. The cost of the material used in the house was $1,000.

Monday, October 21, will be Chinese Day, the occasion being the celebration of the Feast of the Lanterns. This will be the first time this feast has ever been celebrated in Boston and the second time in this country.

The affair will be under the auspices of the Chinese mission, and any Chinaman who smokes in the mission at No. 16 Oxford street, will be given a ticket admitting him to the fair free on that day.

The Chinese women of Boston will come to the fair in an automobile and will then bill come the Chinese children. It is expected that there will be from three to four Chinamen and women present. The people are really taking a great interest in the affair.

Chinese Band Secured.

Posters printed in Chinese are, or will be, to-day distributed all through Chinatown in Boston and other New England cities, setting forth the merits of the fair, the management of which has sent to New York to get a Chinese band, as it was impossible to secure one in Boston.

The Old Inn will be turned over to the Chinese for the day and Chinese dishes will be served in place of the regular meal. Giant Chinese kites, some of them ten and twenty feet tall, will be flown from the roof of Mechanics Building and exhibited inside by night. There will be many other interesting exhibits of Chinese goods.

Mr. Rogers, who has charge of the affair for the managers of the food fair, has received word that parties of Chinamen will come from Providence, Worcester and other cities to spend the day at the fair.

STATE LABOR FEDERATION IN CONVENTION TO-DAY

VIGOROUS ADDRESS MADE BY PRESIDENT COHEN AT MILFORD.

Special to the Boston American.

MILFORD, Oct. 14.—The convention of the Massachusetts State Branch of the American Federation of Labor convened here to-day and was called to order at 10 o'clock. Listened to the reports of President Edward Cohen and Secretary-Treasurer Dennis D. Driscoll. Both of the reports included vigorous appeals for all union men to stand together and fight their own fights.

More than 200 delegates were present when the convention was called to order in the town hall.

President Cohen at the conclusion of his report said: "In the strengthening of his own organized movements, the large majority of the employers of labor and the wealth are the recipients of some betterment of their financial condition.

Methods Successful.

The president, after telling of the organizing of the State Federation in 1887, said, "our organized method for improved sanitary, industrial and moral condition has been most successful beyond question.

Reporting on the instructions given to the delegates last year to endeavor to get office in this State those politicians who were opposed to eight hour labor and its demands, the president stated that these efforts have been reasonably successful, but that they would have been more successful had not "many of our representatives labor men either kept silent on the issue or refused their services, and in some instances obstructed the work which you assigned your delegates."

During to the many increases in wages obtained on the different lines of labor, the president asked the unions to call for higher rates and assistance in case of their fights.

Eighteen new unions have been organized in the State during the past year by General Organizer Frank J. McCarthy.

A plea for the recognition of the union label was made by President Cohen in his report.

Two pages of the report are given over to a review of the teamsters' strike in Boston. It says: "Mayor J. Higo of the Employers' Association of Massachusetts, which fought the teamsters, is referred to in the following terms: 'Any man who would not boodwink the public.'"

The president then made a speedy trial of the injunction suit against the officers of the teamsters' union and the organization and asked the public for giving its sympathy to the suffering wage-earners seeking a living wage, and for "withdrawing its patronage from all who would deprive them of that which is dearest of dragging down the workingmen to the level of starvation and degradation because they have the temerity to organize for the betterment of their condition."

Approved Trade Agreements.

As a means of averting hasty and ill-considered strikes, the president expressed his approval of the growth of trade agreements between employers on the one hand and the local unions, backed by the international union, on the other.

"I wish," said the President, "to impress upon this convention that the beneficial observances of trade agreements by trade unionists will be the surest step upon the general public the fact that trade unions possessing and practicing high ideals are institutions worthy of the fullest recognition and confidence.

"Effectual open shops, the President said:

"If therefore becomes obligatory upon the part of our organizations to resist all principles made by the advocates of the so-called open-shoppers in their endeavors to inject their un-American methods of disruption of our unions."

Actions speak louder than words.

BRAVE WOMAN CHEERS CREW FACING WATERY GRAVE

From left to right are Chief Officer A. B. Cheney, Captain E. W. Allen, Mrs. E. W. Allen, rescued from the sinking schooner Addie Morrel, and Captain A. W. Davison of the Admiral Dewey.

RESCUE EIGHT FROM SINKING SHIP IN GALE

Captain's Wife Refuses to Leave Vessel Before Her Husband.

A harrowing tale of a three days' fight against death on a sinking ship is told by the seven men and a woman saved from the Boston bark Addie Morrel and landed here today by the steamer Admiral Dewey of the United Fruit Line.

Captain Ernest W. Allen, his wife, and six seamen were taken off the foundering craft late Thursday night after a long struggle against a furious gale. The flames from the craft, which the captain had fired, lighted the mountainous seas, and in all probability prevented the loss of the occupants of the second boat landed by Mrs. Allen. She refused to leave the ship until her husband went over the side.

Runs Into a Tempest.

The Morrel put out of Salem on her trip from Rockport to Philadelphia with a cargo of paving stone, on September 27. On Sunday night, September 30, she ran into the tempest which did such havoc all over the North Atlantic.

On Monday morning her foretop gallant mast went by the board and the chain plates of her mizzen mast were torn from their fastenings.

The mast rocked in its step so violently as to start the seams in the vessel's planking, and she began to leak at a rapid rate. Both the gasoline power and hand pumps were manned by all on board. Mrs. Allen taking her trick as well as the men, but the water gained.

Woman Cheers Crew.

All this time the gale increased in fury until Thursday, when the wind abated, but the seas rolled as high as ever. With the seas coming until the forecastle was under water, all on board were forced to the decks, saving what provisions they could and eating their meals uncooked as they fought for life at the pumps.

The crew was discouraged, but the brave little wife of the master never lost her spirits, and by both example and cheering words kept the men to their tasks. At night tar barrels were burned on deck and on Thursday night, at 8 o'clock, a steamer was sighted. This was the Dewey, heading for Boston from Jamaica, with Captain and Mrs. Davison as passengers.

SCHOONER HIT BY BARGE SINKS

VINEYARD HAVEN, Oct. 14.—The British schooner Democrat of Parrsboro, N. S., Captain G. M. Morris, from Guttenburg, N. J., for St. Stephen, N. B., with a cargo of 220 tons of coal, was sunk at the entrance to Vineyard Sound yesterday by collision with the barge Harrisburg.

The five men on board had barely time to escape going down with her.

The tug passed the schooner in safety, but, according to the Democrat's captain, the Harrisburg did not follow the course of the tug and struck the schooner on her starboard bow, cutting her down, so that she sank in five minutes.

2 MEN ARRESTED IN TELEGRAHERS' RIOT

POLICE BREAK UP STRIKE DEMONSTRATION IN NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—A police charge and two arrests broke up a demonstration by striking telegraphers in front of the Western Union building early to-day.

The unionists, wearing big badges with the word, "STRIK," assembled in front of the building in accordance with a resolution adopted at yesterday's meeting calling for a show of strength and determination to hold out against the Western Union and Postal companies.

Their appearance in front of the former company's building gathered an immense crowd and blocked Broadway for many blocks. The commotion brought everyone in the building to the windows and started a rumor that there was to be an attack on the strike-breakers.

Police Charged Crowd.

Police reserves were summoned, the crowd was charged and James Harriette and Anthony Corcle, both wearing telegraphers' badges, were taken to the Tombs on charges of disorderly conduct.

In front of the Postal building the strikers contented themselves with trailing past on the opposite side of the street.

"We have already made arrangements to defend the two strikers arrested," it was said at union headquarters. "We will see them through. Plans are complete for demonstrations in all parts of the city. Our men will march in bodies through the streets and for this we have obtained permits. This is no smoldering fight anymore. It is now out in the open and to the death."

Samuel J. Small, president of the unified commercials, gave up his room on the parlor floor of the Astor House at 3 o'clock this morning and disappeared unescorted and alone. After he had been located on a mass meeting yesterday, where he was charged with mismanagement and cowardice, he was escorted to the office here.

The opinion that Small must resign was expressed on all sides at the union headquarters to-day.

The local officials charge that Small has held back the insurance fund of $15,000 and has insisted that $5,000 "must be held in the treasury of the national organization."

"Why should we keep on paying salaries to officials who say we are losing?" said Percy Thomas, deputy national president, who heretofore has been one of Small's staunchest supporters.

The local leaders will take steps at once to try to recover from the national treasury $5,000, which is New York's share of the funds held in reserve by Small.

Belvidere Brooks, superintendent of the Eastern division of the Western Union, said:

"The Western Union had nothing to do with the arrests. We will not prosecute the prisoners. This is the work of the police in keeping the peace."

Percy Thomas said the union had no idea of giving up, but would fight harder than ever. He said that he believed with a fearless leader the strike would be won quickly.

LETTER TO SMALL OUSTS HIM FROM UNION LEADERSHIP

CHICAGO, Ill., Oct. 14.—Because of the action of President Small in endeavoring to call off the telegraphers' strike, the general executive board of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union has sent out the following messages from Chicago:

To S. J. Small, Astor House, New York:

Under Article 5, Section 7, of the constitution of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union, you are hereby suspended from the office of president, to take effect immediately.

It is the intention of the board that in the future this strike be conducted on a non-union basis.

Government Service Shows Women Are Well Up With Men

By Mrs. John A. Logan

Copyright, 1907, by American-Journal-Examiner.

WOMEN employes of the Government are at last receiving the recognition they have long deserved. They now receive the same salaries as men if their services are of the same efficiency and importance as those rendered by men.

Long years ago General F. E. Spinner suggested to Secretary Chase of the employment of women by the Government to supply the deficiency in the number of available male employes occasioned by the rush of men to arms at the breaking out of the Civil War. He contended that their compensation should be the same as that given men in like positions.

The passage of the bill providing currency and the "greenbacks" made it necessary to employ many persons to count this money in the treasury department. General Spinner felt that the deft fingers of women could handle these bills of paper clean more rapidly and correctly than it could be done by the men.

His judgment proved correct. His reports on the amount and perfection of work done were so complimentary to women that every year witnessed a great increase in the number employed by every department of the government. It having been discovered that there were few positions that could not be more correctly and filled by women. The old idea that women should work for less than men has, however, prevailed.

Women Do Better Work

THE records will doubtless show that women have worked side by side with men for years at exactly the same work the women, however, showing better records in efficiency and amount of work accomplished.

Still their salaries have been much less, simply because they were women. There has never been any reason for this unjust ruling except that women could not vote and thereby render political service to those in power.

The argument that men have greater responsibilities does not hold good, as it would be almost impossible to find many women in the service of the Government who were without dependents on them for support.

A census would surely show that as a matter of fact there were many more women than men in office who were bearing heavy burdens, because, as a rule, women do not wish to go out and battle with the world unless necessity compels them to do so.

Private corporations have recognized the fact that it is imperative that they should increase the wages of their employes, and have stimulating increases in pay of every person on their lists, from porters to superintendents and managers.

Therefore there should be no hesitancy on the part of the Government to treat its servants with like justice, as there have to pay the same market prices as others for the necessities of life. Their work is just as important, notwithstanding the erroneous opinion that is abroad to the contrary.

Right Basis of Merit

GRADUALLY the civil service is getting on the right basis of merit alone entitling every one on the Government rolls to like compensation for like service without regard to sex. Under previous conditions, the character and faithfulness of the services rendered determining their status and remuneration.

The heritages and false prejudices heretofore affecting women will be obliterated, and they will be rewarded as they will treat the stronger sex in the records they will make.

Naturally there will be drones in every hive, but they will not all be women. As in university courses, women are entered for the places at the top of the lists, especially in positions where accuracy, accuracy and infinite patience.

It is a proud boast of the women of the nation that with the hundreds and even thousands of women who have occupied high and low positions of trust and great financial responsibility, but one single woman has proved unworthy and she voluntarily surrendered her bonds and resigned her positions to the Secretary of the Treasury and begged his clemency.

It was subsequently proved that she was but the tool in the hands of a dishonest man, who had skyrocketed, and the money was recovered by the officials of the Treasury Department.

Scores of men have defaulted and, though many of them have been arrested, tried and punished, others have escaped with their ill-gotten gains, but few thousands through embezzlements committed by male employes and agents.

JOHN D.'S DAUGHTER HAS HAT FAD; BUYS MORE THAN ANY "400" WOMAN

Buys Them Singly and Literally by Dozens

MRS. HAROLD MCCORMICK, John D. Rockefeller's daughter, has been struck with amazement in more or less staid inhabitants of Tarrytown, where she is to be seen almost daily since her visit to her father at his Pocantico Hills estate.

For Mrs. McCormick's fad, hobby and delight is hats—big hats, little hats, round hats, flat hats, draped hats, hats of all shades, hues and tints.

Mrs. McCormick has more hats than any one else, either in her own "400" circle or in that of Manhattan. It is said that she has sixty at the very lowest counting. She would keep changing twice a day and keep it up for a whole month without showing the same one twice.

The wonder of some of her friends is how she manages to travel with her recordbreaking assortment of headgear. They hardly see how she can get them all into her trunks, unless she has them sent. Some very few of Mrs. McCormick's intimates know the secret.

The secret is that the daughter of the richest man in the world buys them, whatever city she happens to be in or to pass through.

And she does not buy them one at a time, by the dozen, either. She buys them literally by the dozen. How many she has bought in New York since she has been stopping with her father probably only she knows. But she is increasing her stock each month.

Recently Mrs. McCormick initiated a "hat afternoon." She consisted in inviting to a number of her intimates her many various and sundry hats.

She had only time enough to have forty examined, commented upon, tried on and subjected to somewhat critical scrutiny.

"One" and "Also" was the verdict expressed that Mrs. McCormick entered a hat each to all those present, with a little of memento of the "hat afternoon." Of course, no one "would think of it."

Mrs. Harold McCormick and One of Her Newest and Most Striking Fancies in Hats.

Besides, as some one said, it happened to be the day of the month and therefore hats no longer could be worn.

How much Mrs. McCormick's yearly bill is for the satisfaction of her hat hobby is said by her friends to be a matter at which she isn't telling. That it is well up in the thousands every one who knows her and her hats takes for granted.

USE SHAWLS LIKE TOGAS

WOMEN in Madagascar drape their shawls as the old Roman Senators did their togas. The Roman custom was to wear the toga wrapped around the body and across one shoulder, leaving the other one uncovered.

"THE TURN OF THE BALANCE"

A Thrilling Story of American Life by Brand Whitlock

CHAPTER V.—Continued

Copyright, 1907, by American-Journal-Examiner.

DILLON worked rapidly, expertly, and yet Archie noted, not so rapidly nor so expertly as Curly had worked. Curly was considered one of the most skilful men in the business, but Dillon was older and could tell famous tales of the old days when they had blown safes in the dead of night, when they used to drill the safes and pour in powder.

Dillon's age was telling; his fingers were clumsier and knotted with rheumatism, and now and then they trembled.

Blowing Up a Safe

"Now the soup," Dillon was saying, quite to himself, and he poured the nitroglycerin from a bottle into the little cup he had made of soap.

"And the string," said Archie, anxious to display his knowledge.

"Cheese it," Dillon commanded.

Then, fitting a fulminating cap to the end of a fuse, and he inserted this into the cup. Then he plastered it all over with soap, picked up his revolver, lighted the fuse from the candle, and, rising quickly, he stepped back, drawing Archie with him. They stood in a corner of the room, watching the creeping spark; a moment more and there was the thud of an explosion, and Dillon was springing toward the safe. He seized the handle, opened the heavy door, and was down with his candle, peering into the dark interior. He went through it rapidly, drew out the stamps and the currency and the coin. Another moment and they were outside, and Dillon and Squeak were where Dillon had left them.

"All right," Dillon said. "Lam."

CHAPTER VI.

A WEEK later, returning by a roundabout way, Dillon and his companions came back to town. That night Dillon, Archie, Squeak, Kosko and Curly met in Dillon's room.

Archie was taken up to the detectives' office and found himself facing Kosko, his heart sank.

"Couldn't take a little friendly advice, could you?" said Kosko, thrusting forward his black face.

Archie was dumb.

"Where'd you get that gat?" Kosko demanded.

Still Archie was dumb.

"You might as well tell," Kosko said. "Your pals have spilt on you."

Archie had heard of that ruse; he did not think any of them would confess, and relieved, something in his look deterred Kosko from further questioning for no one but Jackson knew where he had got the weapon. After an hour Kosko gave it up, temporarily at least, and sent Archie back to the prison.

Questioned by Detectives

The next morning all five men were taken to the office of the detectives. Besides Kosko, Quinn and Inspector McFee, there were two others, one of whom the prisoners instantly recognized as Detective Carney, whom Dillon and Mason had long known. Carney, like Inspector McFee, was the only detective in the city whom they had respected, for this brilliant, indefatigable man, with the weather-beaten face, white hair and silent, active ways, had a profound knowledge of all classes of thieves and thieving.

Indeed, this knowledge, which made Carney the most efficient detective in the police, militated against him with his superiors, he knew too much for their comfort.

As for Kosko and the other detectives, they were jealous of him, though he never interfered in their work nor offered suggestions of any kind, but they all felt instinctively that he contemned them.

When Dillon saw Carney his heart sank; Mason's, on the contrary, rose. Carney gave no signs of recognition; it was plain that he was a mere spectator. But when Dillon saw the other man he whispered to Mason out of the corner of his mouth: "It's all off."

This man was a tall, well-built fellow, with iron-gray hair, a ruddy face and a small black mustache above full red lips. He was dressed in gray, and he bore himself as one used to being more than other officers present because he was a United States marshal. The name was Fallen. He glanced at the five men, and smiled and nodded encouragingly.

"I thought it looked like one of your jobs," he said, addressing Dillon and Mason jointly. Dillon could not refrain from nudging Mason, and in the same instant he caught Carney's eye. Carney was looking at Dillon and Dillon smiled, and, to hide the smile, self-consciously ducked his head and spat out his tobacco.

"Well," said Fallen, "I'm much obliged to you men." He included Mason's officials and Kosko and Quinn personally in this polished compliment. "I'll have the Marshal come for them after dinner. I want Mason to see Judge Dillon," he added, decreedly and mournfully, "and Mandell to see Judge Mandell." He was bullseting Squeak. "What's your name?" he demanded.

Squeak hesitated, then said: "Davis."

Fallen laughed in his peculiar, Federal way, and said:

"That'll do as well as any."

Then he looked at Archie.

Cut Him Out

"I don't want him," he said. "He doesn't belong to the gang; he wasn't there. There were only four of them. You can cut him out."

Kosko and Quinn looked at each other in surprise; they were about to protest. In Archie's heart, as he watched this little drama, a wild hope flamed.

Carney, too, looked up, showing the first interest he had evinced. Something in his look deterred Kosko, and Quinn and Inspector McFee, there were two others, one of whom the prisoners instantly recognized as Detective Carney, whom Dillon and Mason had long known. Carney, like Inspector McFee, was the only detective in the city whom they had respected, for this brilliant, indefatigable man, with the weather-beaten face, white hair and silent, active ways, had a profound knowledge of all classes of thieves and thieving.

Indeed, this knowledge, which made Carney the most efficient detective in the police, militated against him with his superiors, he knew too much for their comfort.

As for Kosko and the other detectives, they were jealous of him, though he never interfered in their work nor offered suggestions of any kind, but they all felt instinctively that he contemned them.

When Dillon saw Carney his heart sank; Mason's, on the contrary, rose. Carney gave no signs of recognition; it was plain that he was a mere spectator. But when Dillon saw the other man he whispered to Mason out of the corner of his mouth: "It's all off."

This man was a tall, well-built fellow, with iron-gray hair, a ruddy face and a small black mustache above full red lips. He was dressed in gray, and he bore himself as one used to being more than other officers present because he was a United States marshal. The name was Fallen. He glanced at the five men, and smiled and nodded encouragingly.

"I thought it looked like one of your jobs," he said, addressing Dillon and Mason jointly. Dillon could not refrain from nudging Mason, and in the same instant he caught Carney's eye. Carney was looking at Dillon and Dillon smiled, and, to hide the smile, self-consciously ducked his head and spat out his tobacco.

"Well," said Fallen, "I'm much obliged to you men." He included Marshal Fallen and Kosko and Quinn personally in this polished compliment. "I'll have the Marshal come for them after dinner. I want Mason to see Judge Dillon," he added, decreedly and mournfully, "and Mandell to see Judge Mandell." He was bullseting Squeak. "What's your name?" he demanded.

Squeak hesitated, then said: "Davis."

Fallen laughed in his peculiar, Federal way, and said:

"That'll do as well as any."

Then he looked at Archie.

Cut Him Out

"I don't want him," he said. "He doesn't belong to the gang; he wasn't there. There were only four of them. You can cut him out."

Kosko and Quinn looked at each other in surprise; they were about to protest. In Archie's heart, as he watched this little drama, a wild hope flamed.

Carney, too, looked up, showing the first interest he had evinced. Something in his look deterred Kosko, Quinn and Marshal Fallen from him wrong, that's all. He's been here in town for three years. Of course, it's going to be 'taht my business.' He's been playing in the Business pocket," and walked over to the window.

Kosko and Quinn looked shuffled uneasily.

"Want to get out now?" Archie asked.

Kosko laughed.

"I'll see you through with you."

That afternoon Dillon, Mason, Mandell and Squeak were arraigned before the court on warrants charging them with the robbery of the post office in Kansas.

Gibbs Again

Gibbs appeared at the bail early that evening, his blue eyes filled with a distress that made them almost as innocent as they must have been when he was a little child.

"I just heard of the pinch," he said apologetically.

"Didn't they send you word last night?" asked Dillon.

Gibbs shook his head impatiently, as if it were useless to waste time in discussing such improbabilities.

"Never got word," he said. "I'll send a mouthpiece."

"Yes, do, Dan," said Mason. "We want a hearing."

"Well, now, leave all that to me, Joe," said Gibbs. "I'll send you some tobacco and have John Fallen's deputies see that Gibbs attended to their little wants, but I'm afraid I can't do much for you, Joe, hard, from time to time, employed various of my men in the city, found some of their selections, not by the reputed abilities of the men, but by the reputed abilities of poll with the authorities.

"Carney had employed Prisby on the recommendation of Cleary, the chief of police, with whom Prisby had much influence, but Prisby's charges were extortionate and finally he had stooped to dishonest methods.

"Backbiting over the other lawyers he recalled Shelley Thomas, but Thomas, he found, had gone on a spree. At last he decided on Marriott.

"There's nothing to it," he said to Marriott, "especially so far as Mason's concerned. It's a frame-up, of course, it's all wrong, but these United States inspectors will have to have a fall guy."

Marriott wished that Gibbs and repudiated any other part in the plunder, but the scent seemed desperate enough. He would then seem guilty, and, besides, Gibbs was so very well connected.

But his interest deepened; he found himself talking with a greater power than he encountered in the ordinary State cases; the powers behind the United States.

The officials in the Government building were disobliging; Fallen was positively hounding; from none of them could he receive any satisfaction. The hearing was not set, and then one evening Fallen appeared disappointed. Marriott was engaged, Gibbs was desperate and Marriott found himself sharing Gibbs's concern.

There Is Always a Chance to Save the Woman in the Case

By Beatrice Fairfax

"CAN a man marry an erring woman and reform her?"

Yes, of course he can.

Perhaps the term "reform her" is rather harsh, but he certainly can help her to reform.

The woman who strayed from the straight and narrow path is not a bad woman, and as a rule would give anything in her power to regain the reputation she has lost.

Do you know what she is most afraid of? It is the cold, pitiless eye of the woman who has not known temptation.

The woman who has known temptation and conquered it is always ready to forgive and to hold out a helping hand to the more frail sister.

The woman who has done wrong does not need to be told so. She knows it every hour of her life. The knowledge is driven into her by the averted glances of other women and often, alas, by the lack of respect shown her by men.

A girl's first step on the downward path is usually taken when she is very young, and there are three things that should always be considered when judging her.

First, her innocence; second, her love of a good time; third, her love of pretty things.

Yearns for Fine Things

HER home life may be dull and all of her youth and vivacity cry out for gayety. Her lack of knowledge has been taught, unconsciously, perhaps, the value of a pretty face, and her woman's wit has taught her that pretty clothes enhance a pretty face.

And so, when temptation comes, the poor little butterfly flutters her pretty wings and flies gaily along the path that leads to destruction.

But, oh, how heartrugged and torn those pretty wings are when she tries to return to the light of day. So many helped her to go the wrong way, so few help her toward the right.

She has learned her lesson, she knows there is no happiness where there is wrongdoing, and with all her soul she longs to be reinstated in the good opinion of her fellow-beings.

In the Ensign case, which is at present holding the interest of the public, the husband swears that he did everything in mortal power to help his erring young wife reform.

This she denies, and makes a counter charge of cruelty. Time will prove which of the two tells the truth.

If the woman has deliberately ignored every opportunity given her to change her way of living, she is a great exception to most of her sex.

Given the choice between becoming an honored wife in a luxurious home and remaining an unhappy, homeless woman, there is not one woman in a hundred who would hesitate one moment.

Plea for Kindliness

IF she did not accept her chance of redemption, she was either an unbalanced woman or the chance was not presented in the right way.

Does any one imagine for a moment that the great army of women who have gone astray are happy? They are not; they are wretchedly unhappy, and most intensely do they envy the woman who is happy in the shelter of her husband's love and home.

That happily married woman is the one most earnestly and diligently must help her erring sisters to rise.

If she feels superior and shows it, she smites them with a deadly blow. She is a woman, just as they are, only perhaps her temptation has lain along other lines.

Of one thing I am very sure, and that is that the average woman wants to be good and is more than ready to seize the helping hand held out to her.

Only do not hold out that hand with a feeling of "I am holier than thou," for we are all just every-day women, and we never know when our own special form of temptation may overcome us.

Some Facts About the Wedding Ring

HOW many women know the full import and significance of the wedding ring?

Since in the early history of the race, when warriors and rulers thought it degrading to know anything of writing, every great man owned a signet ring, upon which was engraved some emblem peculiar to him alone. With this ring he put his stamp on orders and documents.

The giving of this ring to anyone was a sign of the greatest love and trust, and endowed the receiver with all the powers of the owner.

Sometimes when men were absent or suffering from illness they gave their rings to their wives so that they might transact their business for them, and this custom continued until the ring became a symbol of wifehood.

Gradually the ring lost its original significance of authority and became more and more a token of affection. Then as at present one of society's amusements.

NO NUT-BROWN MAIDS

THE nut-brown maid is out of fashion now.

No longer is the cheek of tan of the stalwart girl with freckled face and sunburned hands the fashion. Indeed, the easy-going ways of our grandmothers are taking the place of former strenuous sports. The leisure and comfort of the automobile seem to influence the present-day girl toward inactivity. She prefers rest as much as she used to or play tennis or golf. No, the gentle game of motoring is supposed to run directly from there to the heart.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

By Beatrice Fairfax

HOLD NO COMMUNICATION

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am in a pitiable situation and regarding me kindly to let honor and right guide me. At times I feel that I am a conquer, but the old feeling grips me and it seems to me that I am dying by inches. I love a man passionately; he has proved his love for me hundreds of times. We are both married, he unhappy and I unhappy. Of late I have tried to give him up, but cannot. His disposition is one that needs love and affection. Sometimes I do not care to live. His sufferings are hard, but we are both suffering alike.

Do you think it would be very wrong for me to correspond in a friendly way only, or will it be for the best to not write to each other? I have tried to forget him, but that is impossible. DOUBTFUL.

It is very hard that you should be unhappy, but you know about his wife and your husband? If your husband's disposition needs love and kindness, his wife is the one to give it to him, not you. The only thing for you to do is to be true to your own self, your own ideals.

Some time you will be glad you conquered this love and will be very glad that you made a strong enough fight to keep away from his fire brace and remember your duty as a wife.

BETTER EXPLAIN MATTERS

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am twenty years of age and am going with a young lady whom I very much like. She has called me one or two times. Now, I have very little money to be with her, as I am taking up a course in Cooper Institute and have a study, but now about his wife and your husband? If your husband's disposition needs love and kindness, his wife is the one to give it to him, not you. The only thing for you to do is to be true to your own self, your own ideals.

Some time you will be glad you conquered this love and will be very glad that you made a strong enough fight to keep away from his fire brace and remember your duty as a wife.

I THINK your best plan would be to explain matters to her. Tell her that you have to work hard to keep up your studies and that much as you would like to see her oftener you cannot call more than once a week without injuring your work. If she is a reasonable girl she will see that you think all the more of you for your industry.

SEEKING AN EDUCATION.

DEAR MISS AFIRFAX:

Though I am well aware that you do not receive letters from boys, will you kindly, if possible, help me as best you can?

I am a young man twenty-seven years of age, and have been married since I was twelve years old. I received little or no education, and now I feel the want of it. I would, if possible, like to go before the bar examination, and to write and speak in foreign language correctly. Miss Fairfax, I have tried hard for this, but I find it impossible. I am a hardworking man and do not care to work still 7 o'clock, so I have no time to study only in the evening.

I THINK your best plan would be to go to night school. If you inquired at any of the public schools I think you could get some information as to where you could find a reliable night school. I hope you will be successful, and admire you very much for your determination to improve your mind.

CHAPTER I.

STILL are the woods of Maine in October. Nature steals over the hills and through the woods, sadly wondering why the dying Summer does not voice herself in the gay snow of rioting brilliant dyes assembled in honor of her approach wedding with Winter. Joe Summer's wife closed eyes as the leaves whispered and the birds are hushed in awe.

Rolled in my hammock, I gazed one eye upon the fragrance of a coffee pot mingled with the aroma of the forest gazing everywhere.

Joe Thompson, best guide in the region of the Forks of the Kennebec, was coming up from our cabin on the shore with a string of trout.

As he neared, yawned, and stretched lazy arms in contentment, I said: "Peace, Joe."

"Ye never was a talker; he just nodded.

I smiled over and stared up through the trees, watching them toss their heads graciously over the news the breezes brought. I pictured them as wireless stations, receiving all the news of the world and adding it on. Now and then a bush in our clearing seemed to get a message, for it nodded drowsily.

"Goin' to get up?

I awakened with a start.

"Coffee's done," said Joe, "an's trout."

He turned and walked down to the fire. I knew the announcement was sufficient. "Wait anything at the postoffice?" Joe asked. He had finished his breakfast and was sitting against a birch stump, smoking and watching me wading into the coffee and fish.

Bar Visitors.

"I want some mail," I said between mouthfuls. "And I don't want a telegram, a newspaper, or any communication from the BOSTON AMERICAN—see, Joe—no visitors."

He nodded as stolid and inexpressive as usual, and rising, cleaned his pipe, wiped it, inserted a stem from his navy string and took up the paddle.

Back by dinner," he shouted, pushing off the canoe.

I went to the shore and watched him until he was out of sight around the bend of the creek.

I was alone in the woods without a soul to disturb me, to whip my creek or spread my net. For I had no desire for angling and all thereabouts was therefore plentiful.

Silently Joe went about preparing dinner, as he called it, after I had returned with a big bunch of mail, post cards, etc.

"Joe," I said, sorting over the post cards, "tell me why people send post cards to a man in camp."

"Dunno," he grunted, placing a birch twig scientifically in the fire and fanning the blaze with his hat.

"I don't either," I agreed, "I think it's because they know you can't return their fire!"

"Geese!" returned Joseph. "Saw deer"

"So did I," I replied, "half mile up creek."

"Two miles down the rapids." he returned.

"We might have had some venison for supper."

"Huh!" commented Joseph.

"I was within ten yards," I continued, "should have got him easy."

Joseph's retort was briefer still. He said nothing.

"Suppose you wonder why I missed?" inquired.

"Jesse," said he, "You sleep now, I got to get some wood."

Strange Rustle

He stalked toward the trees with that long stride as silent as himself. But as he went I heard a strange rustle.

"Joe," I asked, "in a hurry?"

He halted and looked back at me with a sidling glance.

The rustling sound had ceased.

"Think you're going to have that BOSTON AMERICAN all to yourself?" I inquired.

"Huh!" observed Joe Thompson, a grin spreading over his honest leathery face, as he returned slowly to the fire.

"Come on, give up," I commanded.

"Huh!" He knelt down to his bacon of his blue shirt.

"Ah-h!" I sighed. For it was the one lost chord accentuated by my physician when he ordered me to the woods to convalesce from the fracture of the skull I had received in Roxbury the night I intruded into the intinition of Slasko.

The first headline brought me to my feet in alarm.

"Read," said Joe.

"Cashier and millions missing," I cried. "Aged cashier of the Sixteenth National Bank busts vault of millions and disappears. Supposed to have fled to Mexico."

Joe walked to the fire.

Presently I came out of the story, so to speak, and realized that Joe was acting very strangely. Seemed unable to sit down, stand up or even walk about. For he did all three in turn with evident dissatisfaction.

"What's the matter, Joe." Had you any money in the Sixteenth National Bank?" I asked.

"Huh!" he replied; "no!"

He put a huge chunk of tobacco with great care in one hollow of his cheek. There it stood out, an ungainly plumpness.

With his knees clasped in his hands, he sat evidently trying to extinguish the fire with tobacco juice.

"Now, what's worrying you?" I asked. "Telegram," he said, laconically.

"For me?"

"Huh!" he replied.

"Where is it?"

"Didn't take it."

"Good business." I commended.

"Read it," he continued; "said: 'Come back. Big story.'"

Neither of us spoke for some minutes. I broke the silence.

"Joe," I said, "if your education had been neglected, you would have been invaluable. Got to pack up to-night."

"Huh," said Joe.

(To be continued to-morrow.

HISGEN GIVEN ROYAL WELCOME BY VOTERS IN THREE BIG CITIES

German Clubs Host to Independence League Candidate for Governor—New Evidence of Mellen Merger Grab Witnessed in Trips Between Holyoke, Northampton and Springfield.

SPRINGFIELD, Oct. 14.—Hon. Tom Hisgen, candidate for Governor on the Independence League ticket, received an ovation from his German friends in this city, Holyoke and Northampton yesterday.

At each of the places, where he met the Republicans of German-American residents of this section of the State, he was assured that he would receive their undivided support. Mr. Hisgen was delighted over the result of his informal visits.

With Abigail E. Roter in a sort of guided and travelling toastmaster, Mr. Hisgen took the electric car at Court square for Holyoke, and the trip up the Connecticut Valley was a delightful one. It also was for instance, right here can be one of the arguments against the New Haven and Boston & Maine railway merger, that Mr. Hisgen challenged any of the Gold or Wallace nominees to.

The distance between Springfield and Northampton is about twenty-five miles. The fare on the electric cars is 25 cents. The fare on the Boston & Maine steam cars is the same.

Plan for Killing Competition.

Much of the way the two lines run right alongside of each other. The electric road is one of those that Mr. Mellen has already gobbled. The other road is the one he wants, so that he can end competition and get fifty cents for the trip on each. That is what it costs on the New Haven railway to go from here to Hartford, just about the same distance.

How any person who travels between this city and Northampton could favor any candidate who favors the merging of the roads with this example of competition right before their eyes is something that the genial League candidate cannot understand.

The Hisgen party left the car at Springdale and called at the German Turn-Verein in that section of the pretty city of Holyoke. There was a souse-kraut and wurst, a la sort of German barbecue in which young pigs are served up.

There was a large attendance, and when Mr. Hisgen appeared he was enthusiastically received. After a general introduction Mr. Hisgen was called on for a speech.

Standard Father of Trusts.

He talked in German and then he was asked to address them in English. This wasn't because they did not understand Mr. Hisgen's German, but because many of them prefer to understand English better than they did German.

"Some of you folks know me," said Mr. Hisgen. "I have been fighting the Standard Oil trust in this section for years. That trust is really the father of all the others. As a result of these fights we have low prices and high prices of about everything a person is obliged to have.

"The trusts have got hold of about all the necessities of life and they are so tremendous, so hard-hearted, so desirous of making millions at the expense of the people, that living in a decent way is almost impossible with the man who works for a living.

The Strong-Arm Convention.

"The Independence League is foe of the trusts, it is also a bitter opponent of the other parties which have fallen into the hands of the trusts. There is little difference between the two old parties in this city now. The leaders of both are swayed by the great corporations.

"As to the twin conventions of the Democrats in Springfield there is only one thing to say. Each side used its own peculiar methods. One had unlimited money—the up-to-date method of securing conventions and elections. The other went back to nature—the prehistoric way of doing things.

"And the clubs won over the cash. Both Whitney and Gaild should withdraw. They will wish they had after the returns come in."

German Scholar Faithful.

One of the Germans of Holyoke who shook Mr. Hisgen's hand and enlisted in his cause was George Gottsman. He is a teacher of German in the schools. He is a prominent in German circles and at one time was a candidate for the Board of Aldermen.

Mr. Gottsmann assured Mr. Hisgen that he would do everything in his power to help his election.

From Holyoke the party took another electric car for Northampton, with the Connecticut River meadows on either side because of the enticing fun in the Mellen railroad gleaming in the sunlight to the right. Mr. Tom rising caused the range of Holyoke Mountains stretching in the distance, the trip to Northampton was full of beauty.

Big Northampton Welcome.

Mr. Hisgen was taken to the Bender Hall, in the Big State suburbs of the city. The splendid hall was well filled with members, and the League candidate had a repetition of the Holyoke meeting.

Here Hisgen started a poem in German and then talked about some of the issues of the campaign in English. When Mr. Hisgen left he left in his wake with the assurance of support of the members, who promised that they would do some missionary work among the absentees.

"It will be all here now on many times during the campaign," said Mr. Hisgen, "and I want you all to attend my meetings."

"We will—you can rely on that" was the response of the members in the chorus.

From the hall the little party went to the headquarters of the Independence League, which is in the Masonic building in Northampton.

Death Danger on Railroad.

Mr. Hisgen shook hands with the president, John Preskop, E. T. Damon, one of the most active of the members, and several others who happened to be about.

The Northampton people are very anxious to have a rally soon, and Mr. Hisgen told the League leaders that it would be done.

Mr. Damon, who formerly worked for the New Haven railway, but had to find other employment, because he told the truth about a certain attack says he is desirous that the League take up the railroad question in his section of the State.

"The Central Vermont railway," said Mr. Damon, "is a disgrace to the State. Never a passenger train passes over it that the freight cars are not taking their lives in their hands. I have called the attention of the officials of the road's attention to this.

Spread Rails With Foot.

"I have said that the ties are so rotten that I could pull the spikes out with my fingers. The officials asked me to do it. And I did. I spread the rails with a push of my foot and kicked the ends of ties off.

"The Connecticut Valley street electric line is almost as bad. If is unsafe, and there will be a big smashup there some day. It is largely the fault of Guild's Railway Commissioners.

"We, Hisgen is one of the divisions of this electric line the schedule calls for the run from one end of the line to reach the other. Mr. Damon told this to Mr. Hisgen. The candidate of the Independence League listened with growing astonishment and anger.

"Well, I'll tell you one thing, Mr. Damon," he replied. "If I am elected Governor that Board of Railroad Commissioners will not last long. I know something about their methods."

Springfield Papers Boom.

From Northampton the party returned to Springfield and Mr. Hisgen spent part of last evening at the Turn-Verein in this city. He is a member of this organization and all of the members are working to secure his election.

"We know him," said one of the prominent members. "He is honest and he is willing to fight for principle. He could have been a rich man if he had sacrificed his principles for the asking words. If he had quit fighting the Standard Oil trust, but he is not that kind of a man.

"He will receive a big vote in the western part of the State, where he is known, and between now and election day he will be known in the rest of the State."

Mr. Hisgen received many compliments to-day on his letter of acceptance. The Springfield Republican and the Springfield Union of yesterday printed it in full with pictures of the candidates.

Planning State Tour.

One of the most prominent and widely-known Republicans in this part of the State, who lives in Springfield, stopped Mr. Hisgen and said:

"Mr. Hisgen, I have read your letter of acceptance. It is the kind of a statement I like. I have never before in my life told a candidate that I would support him, but I'm going to vote for you."

John R. Smith, one of the hustling young men of this city, accompanied Mr. Hisgen on his little tour. He is a red-hot Hisgen worker.

"I know Tom Hisgen," he said. "I used to work for him. Now I'm going to work for his election. I have hundreds of friends who will vote for him. And I'm going to get busy and make some more friends and get them in line."

Mr. Hisgen is spending to-day at his home in West Springfield getting ready for the last week of the tour from one end of the State. He will leave here for the eastern section of the State this evening or to-morrow.

GIRL DIPPERS WIN IN STRIKE

All but five of the 120 chocolate dippers at the Dow candy factory in Union street, the most of whom struck last week, returned to work to-day, according to a statement made by F. H. Dow, manager of the plant.

"The strike is settled," he said. "All of the girls came back to-day except five. Some concessions were made on both sides."

A commercial traveler for the firm is credited with having acted as an embassy to the strikers. The girls offered to return for seven and one-half days pay, but the concern would not give in to that. Mr. Dow refuses to tell what the concessions were.

TWO LINERS DUE TO-DAY.

The Lawrentian of the Allan line, from Glasgow with 260 second cabin passengers and 124 in the steerage, and the White Star liner of the Leyland line, with 46 saloon passengers, are due this afternoon.

FLED IN FEAR OF WILD MAN

WEBSTER, Mass., Oct. 14.—There is a real wild man in Thompson's woods near here, and two young men whom he chased yesterday are trying to organize a posse to run him down. George M. Humes and Walter Berthiaume, who started after a hunting trip last night, told a lively tale of being chased by the wild one through miles of forest, after Berthiaume had mistaken him for a bird and filled him full of shot.

They described the man as tanned almost black and clad in rags. When he pursued them he brandished an axe and uttered wild yells. Although they both had fire-arms they did not stop to argue with him.

Harvard's preliminary gridiron season is over, and now comes real work. But there will be no more games on Wednesday, and Coach Crane will start in shifting his men for the game with the Middies on Saturday at Annapolis.

The Crimson team is virtually selected, or rather the field has been narrowed down to about seventeen men, from whom the eleven will be made up.

The Williams game developed several weaknesses in the play of the team, and in the work of some of the individuals. In the first place, the line of defense will have to improve in order to be able to hold the Navy.

Burr, Fish, Grant, Forschemer and Forster stood out prominently Saturday on account of the way they recovered fumbles and secured the ball.

Brennan Out of Game.

Harvard's cripple list will not be materially increased. Brennan's injury, which consisted of some torn ligament in his leg, will probably keep him out of the game for three weeks or longer. In view of this it looks as though his value to the team was about gone. He is the younger brother of one of Harvard's best backs, Lockwood, another of the men who was taken out of the game on Saturday on account of injuries, was under the care of physicians, and the test showed that nothing was the matter with his leg but a trifling strain, which will not keep him out of the game for long. Peirce will be out early, as his head was not seriously injured by the kick which he received.

The progressive policy which the coaches have adopted with regard to Harvard's plays is most encouraging. They have been steadily at work evolving new formations and have never hesitated to try out these formations at any time in the practice games which up till now made up Harvard's schedule. All sorts of variations of the forward pass and onside kick have been tried and the detail work in the execution of these plays has been perfected from day to day. Harvard's forward pass early in the season was weak, to say the least. The pass was executed on a wrong principle and there was not an attempt made to afford the player who was to make the catch any protection. The same was true of the quick kick. But the defects have been remedied.

Use Open Plays.

One good reason for the increased success of the new open plays is that the Harvard players receive constant opportunity to use them. Coach Crane is willing to take his chances of Yale being able to evolve defense against a team which will render them ineffective. He believes that lack of familiarity with them in actual play on the part of his own men will cost him a far greater harder to their sorrow.

M'GRATH'S BIG HAMMER THROW

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—The most attractive event at the games of the Knights of Columbus A. C. at Celtic Park was the hammer throwing, with Matt McGrath of the New York A. C. and Jack Daly of the Celtic the scratch mark. The duel between the big men brought a lot of enthusiasts to the ground, McGrath again showing his class by sending the hammer 168 feet, but this did not secure him the prize, as T. G. Sierman, with a 20-foot handicap, won with a throw of 145 feet 10 inches. McGrath was third, the Xavier A. A., with 30 feet handicap, was third with a throw of 132 feet 3 inches. Freeman's best throw was 129 feet 7½ inches. John J. Daly won the two-mile steeplechase in 13 minutes 26 seconds, which was rather a good test of his standing after his defeat for the championship on Saturday. Martin Sherdan won the discus from a field of eight circles and scored 3 circle, the latter being that used in Greece, but no records were broken.

RUBE WADDELL'S RECORD.

In the pitching feats of the season Rube Waddell of the Athletics holds the banner for strikeouts, having no less than 250 to his string, while Walsh of the Chicago Americans, with 210, is his nearest rival. Donovan of Detroit leads his league, and both leagues for that matter, in percentage of games won. Buelbach of the new world's champions, leading his league, and being Donovan's close second.

Sullivan Offers the Champion Easy Terms

JACK TWIN AFTER BURNS

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 14.—Jack Twin Sullivan, the hatless wonder of the Bean City, has not given up hope of drawing Tommy Burns into a fight. The Boston spendthrift is now in Los Angeles, figuring with McCarey on a battle with Burns. "I beat him the last time he fought me," said Sullivan, "and what kind of a heavyweight champion can he call himself if he sidesteps a chance to wipe out that decision against him? I know that he had nothing on me then—I knocked him down in the last round of that fight—and you bet I can do it again. If he is so sure that he can beat me, let him make the match. I will agree to give him the long end of the purse just to get him into the ring."

Jack Twin is a thrifty soul. This is the first time he ever made a statement like this in his life. Both the Sullivans are out for the coin and they usually insist on a private agreement by which the money is to be split even. This is why it is enough to turn a great majority of the sports against them, for both the Twins have a bad habit of going twenty rounds to a decision, usually taking the same. They do not believe in inflicting much damage and claiming that his story of being off his feed is true. They say the shrewdest, toughest pair of bald-headed birds in the ring today, and while they are few knockouts in either of their records, they are hard nuts for champion timbers to bust. Jack Twin says that Bill Squires can hit. "If beat him the last time he fought me," said Sullivan, "and what kind of a heavyweight champion can he call himself if he sidesteps a chance to wipe out that decision against him? I know that he had nothing on me then—I knocked him down in the last round of that fight—and you bet I can do it again. If he is so sure that he can beat me, let him make the match. * * *

While Joe Gans has very kindly donated the lightweight championship to George Memsic, there is a deep rooted suspicion that the old master is playing possum for a few months. He still has a few good licks in his system and he is not quitting with any carnegie roll at that. The money may look good to him, but that plush furniture is installed in the Gold-field Hotel at Baltimore and Joe has often said in connection with his retirement, "Of course, if I go broke again I'll have to come back and fight."

While he may not go broke, he may need the ready money and he has a few good matches in sight.

Because of the wretched showing that he made against Gans, Nelson is loudly claiming that he is the real champion. Over full of his food—the night he fought Britt—is true Nelson is crazy for another fight with Gans and under the proper handling and management, may get it.

Memsic having won the championship rounds with Gans, may be signed up for a return match. Since the old master needs the money. A few months lay off will not do Joe any harm and in the meantime Barry McFarland may be secured for Memsic.

Packey offered to fight Memsic at 133 pounds ringside, but Memsic said that his next fight must be at 133 pounds at 6 o'clock after which he would be pleased to make 133 ringside for anybody.

For a young man who has been donated a title, this is no kind of talk to hand out with a good match in sight.

If Gans could do 133 ringside, the man who succeeds to his title, even with a string to it, should be willing to do the same.

The Coast sports are crazy to see Packey McFarland in action. Though he has never whipped a good man in his life, he has so many knockouts in his record that it is easy that he must be a punishing whirlwind fighter and there is always a chance for such a man.

Abe Attell wired from Chicago that Packey was four flushing and would never fight Memsic, but this may have been one of Abe's artistic little knocks.

But Nelson says that MacFarland is the coming champion of the world. All right, let him come!

Foxey Gans, Hunting Alligators,

USES MEMSIC AS DECOY

BY TAD.

George Memsic, who was handed the lightweight title by Joe Gans, is looked upon by the sporting public more as a bait than as a real champion.

That Gans person isn't nutty or anything like that, and just as soon as some good, husky boy with a big following looms up on the horizon old Joey will be there like a duck for the oodgings.

Alligator hunters in Florida play this same game on the running alligator. They lay out the same unbleeped American kid, tie him to a pole, make him yell, and when the hungry alligator comes up to gobble the lunch is popped in the slim. The alligator is all the more particular person in the world. His food need not be well seasoned; he is not fond of a certain brand, but any old thing is the line of meat is his.

The heavyweight comers are the same. They will take anything at all in the 133 pound class for they get big and fat and confident, and then "The Old Master" will come out from behind his retirement rock with his gun in hand and cop the game.

Mr. Alligator arranges the bait—preparing for a few months, and when the bait comes the hunter will make his presence known.

Gans is the "Johnny Behind the Rock" kid.

* * *

"Well, well!" as the fellow said when the other fellow said that he hadn't heard the story about the two holes in the ground, Martin Hart is to pack the spurs in the heavyweight class again. John McKay, who is looking after the interests of the big fellow, has gone to Louisville—he says he has a peach of the right hand which was broken on Mike Shreck at Tonopah. If the fool says that Marvin is to go after Gans again and "there'll be a chance for such a man.

McKee also adds: "Hart is the only white heavy of any consequence who has been given the decision, as that. From Jeffries down to the heavyweight champion who sidestepped Johnson, and this alone proves Hart a game fellow. He will start again and he will be right. I'll show up that fourflusher Burns to be what he really is."

Quite a few of the Los Angeles sports who saw the Gans-Memsic fight are of the opinion that the Old Master allowed his opponent to stick the limit, as he had a few hundred bucks her that way. One hints that he heard of Gans sending money down to a poolroom so bet at even money that Memsic would stay the limit.

There is nothing new or startling in that, however, as Joe is a past master at that little trick. He fought Rufe Turner at the Acme Club in Oakland some years ago, winning in the last round, which was a knockout. Betting was even that Gans would win in fourteen rounds, and as he outclassed Rufe, as Jeff does Squires, billions of the green stuff went that way with lots of takers.

It was as pretty a fight as you would like to see, and right seconds before the end of each round he dropped Rufus like a log and saved him each time. At the end of Joe's seconds tipped him off in each case that he was going to put him in the first hard enough to keep him down until the bell rangs. Rufus was washed off, pushed to the centre and went on again just as though nothing had happened. In the thirteenth round he wanted to quit, but Spider Kelly, who was behind him, held him up and yelled:

"Go on, Rufe; this is the last round; don't knock it out."

Rufe tried hard, but Joe played with him, and just before the bell—bingo! and he took the count once more. Rufus got up and tried again and again and then in the fifteenth round, when Gans and his pals had decided to "frame" the fourteenth he put his man out.

That Ketchell person wanted 15 per cent of the purse as a bribe to fight Mike "Twin" Sullivan. Oh, he doesn't know a thing, that fellow. Why, three months ago—oh, well, what's the use.

At the ringside of the Sullivan-Squires fight are standing from Iowa the real jumped up and yelled:

"I'll bet fifty head of cattle against $2,000 that Sullivan wins."

"Bring in your cattle," yelled another bug from the opposite side.

CHAMPS TO DIVIDE $35,000

By Boston American Leased Wire.

CHICAGO, Oct., 14.—Manager Frank Chance of the National League baseball club, the winners of the world's championship, is at present the popular idol of Chicago. With a check for $22,903 as his team's share of the profits of the World's series in his pocket and $13,000 additional coming from Bill Muphy, Chance will gladden the hearts of his players when the division of the spoils takes place.

"We have won the world's championship honestly and fairly," he said. "For our opponents, I want to say that things broke rather badly for them. Nevertheless, I believe that I have gathered together the best baseball team that ever covered a field. I cannot hold them to much praise. I have been sharp and severe with them sometimes, but it has always been during games. They do not have to be watched otherwise.

"There is not a player on the Chicago team who would not go to the limit for Chance. They realize that he is a player as well as a manager. He will not ask a player to do a thing he would not do himself. He takes pot-luck with his men. Their joys and sorrows are his own. Their triumphs have been his chief aim. He is a natural born baseball leader. He showed his grit in Friday's game when a foul from "Wild Bill" Donovan broke the middle finger of his right hand. He went back to the bench, had it taped, rejoined up and resumed his position at first base, as though a broken finger were of no consequence.

Nobody recognized the wonderful ability of Chance, as captain and manager, more than President Murphy, of the Chicago club.

All the credit of victory belongs to Mr. Chance," he said after the Cubs had won the championship. "He is a wonderful organizer, a wonderful manager.

"He holds his men together by good fellowship and common interest. That is the secret of the whole thing."

The players will get the money today and then depart for their homes.

The Tigers received a check for $21,000 as their share of the series. Then came a big surprise. Secretary Bruce announced that President Yawkey of the Tigers had presented to the Tiger players $15,000 in addition to their regular share, making their percentage $36,000.

NOTES OF HARNESS HORSES.

It has gotten so there that there are 2:30 trotters come almost entirely from the Grand Circuit and Lexington meetings, and during the season only a stake exception has been noted. There was a time when the Grand Western Circuit rivalled the Grand Circuit in this respect, but in those days it was a comparatively small list of 2:30 performers with records below 2:20.

J. A. Chalifoux, owner of Hedgewood Boy and Lady Maud C., the two big money winners at Columbus in the pacing classes and that have landed summaries of more than $10,000 apiece, says that the selling price of the Boy is $45,000, and that the mare can be had for $30,000 or less. Hedgewood Boy, 2:09¼, is a 5-year-old gelding by Hedgewood, 2:12, and has acted enough of the hoodoo to suit Cal Ben and his wife through the remainder of their lives without trying to get any more.

LOCAL FIGHT FANS TO HAVE A LIVELY WEEK

There is plenty doing along the New England boxing circuit this week and the sport starts up in fine style and continues throughout the week with no let up.

To-morrow the centres of the game will be at Thornton, R. I., at Haverhill and Providence fans will turn out to see that bout at the Rhode Island A. C. in the Thornton suburb, as this is the only good club in that city now, and with such a prominent matchmaker as Johnny Mooney selecting the card the affairs are bound to be lively. As a starter, Tommy Quill, that tough kid from Brockton, will mix with Billy Glover of South Boston, who has put up a few battles with both over the New York. When this pair get in the ring to-night the fireworks will start, as the ringsters will see one of the hardest spills that ever took place in the Thornton club. Both are well known in that district, and their live reputations need no comment.

If Quill can win from Glover he will be in line to face the best in the land.

Maine Championship at Stake.

The championship middleweight title of Maine is at stake at he Haverhill affair, as Bartley Connolly of Biddeford and Tom Sawyer are the disputants. This pair would have drawn half the Pine Tree State had they met up there, but in its return, which is the limit in that State no satisfaction could be obtained. They go twelve rounds at Haverhill and that is long enough to settle the matter of supremacy.

Right here in the Hub the Cooper Social and Athletic Club will open its doors at the quarters formerly occupied by the old Central Club in Roseldale Square, and the directors have secured a star bill, with Percy Coxe, the Seattle knocker, against Albert Dezinno, the local champion.

They are scheduled for fifteen rounds, and a better bout in the ring does not seem arranged. Coxe is a knocker-out, but built like a bantyweight, and is one of the new wonders out of the West. He showed in New York and made good.

To-morrow night the Winnisimmet A. C. of Chelsea have a card of excellent appeal. The feature affair betwen Sam Langford and Jim Barry of Chicago should be a hummer. Their six-round scrap in New York took the Gotham fans by storm. Barry is one of the few who can make it interesting for the long whirlwind, but the trouble has been in the past to get a suitable opponent for the star middleweight from the Hub.

Sales in Indiana during the last eleven months are believed to have reached fully 200,000 cars. This would have a new car number in operation in Indiana eleven months ago. Secretary of State Fred Sims, because of a change in the fiscal year, has just made his report showing that during the eleven months ending September 30 there were 2,500 cars registered by their owners. As there are a large number in use that are not registered the number of cars has been fully 3,000, it is estimated. There are now between eight and nine thousand cars owned in the Hoosier State.

THOMAS WANTS ANOTHER LONG AUTO RACE

BY J. C. KERRISON.

E. R. Thomas of Buffalo says that his company has now received a stock car that can gracefully retire from track racing, but before they do so they would like to challenge the Renault and Flat cars to a twenty-four hour race, to be held on some track or course for any amount.

"As both Mr. Hollander, the agent for the Flat cars, and Mr. Lee, of the Renault agency, are willing, it is probable that a race will be arranged. If the Morris Park track is not available, were entered at the Thomas cars and the Morris Park, the Renault secured just before the race on account of Bernin's injury—and was, of course, unavoidable.

"If the Morris Park racing authorities want the twenty-four-hour race," said Mr. La Croix, "they will find both Mr. Hollander and myself ready to enter our cars against either one competitor or any number. I think they may decided that we are just as willing as Mr. Thomas to settle finally the question of supremacy of America, and we are now awaiting the opportunity."

TOMMY MURPHY HAS MALARIA, BOUT IS OFF

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—Tommy Murphy is ill with malaria, and the fight between the "Harlem Pride" and Packy McFarland of Chicago, scheduled for Wednesday night at Indianapolis, has been called off. Murphy and been feeling badly the past few days and had a severe chill just before going through his training work at the Indiana capital. He grew worse and consulted a doctor. He was found to have had a bad attack of malaria and was unfit to do any strenuous work. Murphy is a game little fighter and will stick a fierce proposition as Packy.

Murphy was badly disappointed at his failure to get into shape for the bout, but realized it would be useless for him to try and fight McFarland in his present condition, and left for his home in New York last night.

The calling off of the bout is a sore blow to McFarland, who had counted on a victory over Murphy which would have figured well put him in line for bouts with some of the contenders for the title and some big purses. Packy had trained faithfully at his quarters in Austin and was ready for the fight and must feel disappointed at the outcome.

An effort will be made to bring the men together as soon as Murphy recovers and get into fighting form again.

PASTOR URGES BREAD LINE TO AID POOR

Mrs. Pasquan's Story of Suffering Suggests Sermon to Rev. H. S. Johnson.

ADVISES MEN TO MARRY

If wealthy Bostonians who spend thousands of dollars annually for automobiles and diamonds would use some of their money in establishing a bread line, no rejected woman would ever try to sell her skin to pay for a starving child, declares the Rev. Herbert S. Johnson.

In his sermon on "Humanitarianism and the Waifs of a Great City," the pastor of the Warren Avenue Baptist Church last night urged every young man to marry and thus save some girl from ever facing want and suffering. He declared that it was the duty of every man to provide a home for some deserving woman who should not be obliged to support herself.

Suggested by Mrs. Pasquan's Story.

Mr. Johnson's words were suggested by the case of Mrs. Marguerita Pasquan, the Italian diplomat's wife, who, when facing starvation, offered her skin for grafting purposes to Bellevue surgeons. Unable to secure work either in Boston or New York, was the case of our sufferings printed in the BOSTON AMERICAN that finally saved her from her plight. The Rev. Mr. Johnson, on hearing of her plight, communicated with the Rev. Arthur McArthur of New York, who, with other new-found friends, gave Mrs. Pasquan assistance which enabled her to return to Boston.

In his sermon the Rev. Mr. Johnson said:

"There are in Boston men with incomes of $500,000 a year who would not miss or perhaps drop a necklace costing $100, or into the lap of wife or daughter. There are women wearing hats, and not as very large either, that cost $50, yet there are others who have prettier ones and bigger ones that cost not over $1.98.

"Establish a Bread Line."

"I suggest that some of our rich people in Boston, instead of paying thousands of dollars for automobiles, utilize some of their money in establishing a bread line, such as existed nightly for many years in New York until till the benevolent Jew who maintained it died.

"With a bread line in Boston there would at least be no need of any man or woman going hungry, however bad the character of the waif."

They Love Him for His Enemies

Why the Voters Will Re-Elect Moran

In 1905, when John B. Moran ran for District Attorney against a candidate who had the united support of both the Democratic and Republican parties he stood upon the following platform:

Official freedom from politicians and grafters.

Official action with the Grand Jury, instantly on receipt of information from the press or private sources, without waiting for the lower Court.

Fair treatment to all lawyers and favors to none.

No withholding of evidence favorable to the defendant.

No intimidation of jurors by reasonless challenges.

No intimacy, social or otherwise, with jurors.

Rigid enforcement of the law against grafters and bribers.

Trivial offenders treated leniently with the idea of reformation.

Justice, tempered with mercy, to all.

Nobody who knows John B. Moran, or who is familiar with his administration of the office of District Attorney, will deny that he has lived up to that platform with absolute fidelity. Official pull and graft have been eliminated from the office of District Attorney.

Every complaint of lawbreaking has been laid before the Grand Jury promptly, without waiting for the action of a lower court.

All lawyers have been upon an equal footing. Moran's best friends have received the same brusque, honest treatment as his worst enemies.

Jurors have been protected, and no attempt has been made by social intimacy to influence their verdicts. Grafters and bribers have been kept in continual terror, and wherever law and the circumstances would permit they have been convicted, and in so far as it lay within the province of the District Attorney they have also been properly punished.

Justice in every case has been tempered with mercy. No one knows this better than the poor, unfortunate people who, having no friends with a "pull" to plead for them, have laid their cases in person before the District Attorney. TO SUCH PERSONS THE DOOR OF MORAN'S OFFICE HAS ALWAYS STOOD OPEN.

One of the planks of this remarkable platform declares that evidence favorable to the defendant shall not be withheld from him. Moran has lived up to that promise absolutely, as many a defendant can testify, including even one JAMES H. DOYLE.

This platform upon which Mr. Moran ran in 1905 is a remarkable platform. Moran is a remarkable MAN.

That he has enemies no one will deny. No one in his position can punish criminals without making enemies. EVERY ENEMY THAT JOHN B. MORAN HAS MADE IS A TRIBUTE TO HIS HONESTY AND SINCERITY.

We have heard much about "graft" in Boston politics. EVERY GRAFTER IS AGAINST MORAN.

That is why the public is going to re-elect Moran as District Attorney. He needs no other platform than the one on which he was elected in 1905.

To Republicans

A vote for Curtis Guild is a vote for Boss Lodge.

YOU had nothing to with the selection of Mr. Guild as the candidate and you will have nothing to do with the selection of Eben S. Draper—the weakest man in the Republican party—as the candidate for Governor NEXT YEAR.

Lodge selected Guild and Lodge selected Draper.

Are you going to be led around by the nose any longer?

Why not vote for a successful business man like Thomas L. Hisgen, who voted for Roosevelt in 1904 and who believes in the Republicanism that Abraham Lincoln stood for?

Hisgen is a modest, unassuming, LINCOLN kind of a man.

A vote for Hisgen is not only a vote for a man whom you might well be proud to see Governor, but it is also a REBUKE TO BOSS LODGE.

To Democrats

A vote for Whitney is a vote for a railroad monopoly. It is a vote to reward legislative corruption and to establish the corporation lobbyist in a seat of honor.

A vote for Bartlett is a vote for a candidate whose supporters obtained his nomination by methods that have made every Democrat in Massachusetts ashamed of his party.

REBUKE THE SPRINGFIELD RIOTERS!

Cast a vote for Thomas L. Hisgen, who was a good enough Democrat last year to be ON THE DEMOCRATIC TICKET, and who is a better Democrat TO-DAY than the men who by violence or treachery are RUINING the Democratic party in order that they may retain control of it.

A vote for Hisgen is a vote for the Republicanism of Lincoln and the Democracy of Thomas Jefferson.

Extermination

By Wex Jones.

THERE won't be a man on the river,
Not a pilot to order a crew,
There won't be one with a license,
When President R. gets through.

There won't be a bear in the canebrakes,
Nor a 'possum to make a stew,
There won't be a bobtail surviving
When President R. gets through.

There won't be a rumor stirring,
But branded as wholly untrue—
Except that strange third-term story—
When President R. gets through.

WASHINGTON.—According to figures prepared by the Bureau of Statistics, the average man will have no cause for complaint this Winter. His income will suffice to purchase half enough coal for the needs of his family; beef will be available now and then, unless the packers boost its price again; pie can be purchased for the Sunday dinner, if the children are not given any.

For a Change, Here's a Picture

This is Actually a FASHION Cut

You do not see pictures in this column very often. But here is a picture that really ought to be seen by the hundreds of thousands of women that read this newspaper. It is a picture that illustrates excellently the editorials that we have printed on corsets and the foolishness of female fashions generally.

Remember that this monstrosity is no fanciful made-up picture. It is a fashion cut, issued in solemn earnest by the House of Baehr & Co., of Paris, sent out in their annual catalogue.

All the horrible details of the cut will not be seen in this newspaper reproduction. To begin with, we have changed it to make it a little more decent, making the dress higher, etc.

Then there is the utterly ridiculous arrangement of the hair that appears in the original, but that can be only guessed at in this quickly printed reproduction.

The main thing and the dreadful thing is that ridiculous waist and those idiotic hips.

What a calamity to realize that this atrocious exaggeration is, after all, what ordinarily sane women are really striving for.

Poor fat, short women toss around at night and dream of a waist like this. Girls with good figures, sensible bodies such as women should have, squeeze themselves and torture themselves trying to look like this female eel.

Old women who ought to be thinking about REAL things are just as foolish as the young ones when they get the "fashion" microbe in their poor old gray heads. They consult with their dressmakers, they squeeze and strive just like the young geese.

Women with tight corsets and laced-in hips and high heels and ridiculous walks, please answer this question truly:

Would you really like to look like this?

No? Then why do you suffocate your poor livers and strangle your poor stomachs trying to look as much like it as possible?

What is such a woman as this good for? She is hardly fit to be the mother of a shrimp. If she had a son he would have a skull like those hips, too narrow for any use.

And that hair—too bad we cannot print it just as the French fashion man planned it. All fixed over on one side are seven little rows of fuzzed-up foolish waves, with queer, unnatural curls on top.

If the Queen of Zululand went crazy and did such things as this to herself, all would vote to restrain her.

Then, women, why do you do such things on a small scale to YOUR selves?

Nature has spent about a million years making something really fine out of you, something useful, intelligent, properly shaped, beautiful and fit for motherhood. and you go and squeeze it all out of shape.

Look upon this picture, you foolish ones, and reform.

Register NOW and Make Sure of Your Vote

Wednesday, Oct. 16, Is the Last Day for Getting Your Name on the List

Because of the steadily growing trend of sentiment in favor of right political principles, which has been accelerated by the deeply disturbed condition of the Democratic party and the many evidences of corporation control of the Republican party, the outlook for the Independence League in this state this Fall is exceedingly bright.

In order to win a victory, however, it is absolutely essential for all members of the League and all lovers of good government, to make sure that they are registered.

It is the duty of everyone interested in the League to see his friend personally and to urge on them the necessity of attending to this matter at the first opportunity.

In the city of Boston registration for the State election closes at 10 o'clock on the night of October 16.

The registration department of the Election Commissioners in the Old Court House will be open every week day, with the exception of Saturday, from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. and from 6 p. m. to 10 p. m. On Saturday the registration books are from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m. and from 6 p. m. to 10 p. m.

Every evening from 6 p. m. to 10 p. m., closing on the night of Wednesday, October 16, there will be registration of voters in the several wards of Boston.

In other cities registrars of voters will hold daily sessions, the cities closing their books for the State election on October 16, after a continuous session from 12 noon till 10 o'clock at night. The towns close registration with a like continuous session on October 26.

It is essential for all voters to register.

It is absolutely necessary that all should register BEFORE next Wednesday night.

Opportunity to register in Boston and other cities is afforded on every day and evening until closing time next Wednesday.

If you live in Boston or any other city in the Commonwealth and fail to register before next Wednesday night you cannot vote on State election day, November 5.

Independence Leaguers may win a great victory if they organize and agitate in behalf of the largest possible registration of League voters.

If your name is not already on the list, make sure that you are registered BEFORE NEXT WEDNESDAY NIGHT.

HUNTING.

HUNTING is a word wich means going from plais to plais. The two grates kinds of hunting is:

1. Hunting flats.
2. Hunting bears.

Hunting flats is the very hardest kind of hunting, because there is only a few flats & lots of peepul hunting. Hunting bears is the easiest, because there is lots of bears & only one (1) President.

When peepul go to hunt a flat they talk all there munny & jolery so they wont feel too cheap when the cullurd hallboy says One flat left on the sixth (6th) floor, four (4) rooms, three thousand dollars.

It taiks a cullurd hallboy all his life to earn three thousand dollars, but he says it aerul soon when you are hunting for a flat.

Hunting bears is the greatest fun of all, for the President. He taiks all the guns he used in the Spanish war, because he is going to the foothills & aul them guns was at the foot of the hill in the Spanish war this is a joak I maid myself.

Then our noabel President goes to the hunting grounds and sixty (60) men chases out a bear for him to shoot, but the bear runs too fast because it is very thin and hungry.

That bear is too thin, says the President, chase out a nise fat one, like Taft.

Then thay chase out a fat bear & the President shoots it in the stomick & after it is ded he says Well, boys, this reminds me of the good old days on the range when our saddles was our pillows & thare was no cocktails or nature faikers.

That's all about hunting.

These little things are great to little men.
